

Efton Park's Guide to Local Eateries

Einstein's Bagels (next to Stop-N-Go Gyros [apparently Einstein's did not spring for the fee to get Google to put them on the map]): Your one-stop shop for all solid toroidal food items. They also have a small selection of simply-connected food.

Dutch's Hamburgers: Many of our students think this place has the best hamburgers in town. Many of our students also think that if the term of a series go to zero, the series converges.

Dutch's Burrito Bar: I haven't tried it – see my comments about Dutch's Hamburgers.

Buffalo Brothers: Move along. You can do better than this.

Banh Shop: As the name suggests, they serve banh mi sandwiches. Pretty good.

McAlister's Deli: So-so sandwich place whose iced tea is not nearly as good as they think it is. You're better off across the street at Potbelly.

Potbelly (also next to Stop-N-Go Gyros): Very good sandwiches. Warning: they sometimes have a loud but marginally talented guy playing guitar at lunchtime.

Stop-N-Go Gyros: It might be fine, but I haven't tried it. I only eat gyros from the Greek House in Norman, Oklahoma, which is a bit of a trek for lunch.

McDonald's: McDonald's is...you know what McDonald's is.

Fuzzy's Tacos: Yummy Mexican food in a divey setting. I recommend the tempura shrimp tacos.

Dave's Hot Chicken: Not great in my opinion, but if you just have to have hot chicken...

Perrotti's Pizza: Used to be good when Richard Perrotti owned the place, but I am not sure about it now. And in any case, how are you going to stay awake for the afternoon talks if you have pizza for lunch?

Fat Shack: Are you really going to feel good about yourself if you eat here?

Salada (facing Berry Street, contrary to what the map shows): Be the architect of your own salad!

Jon's Grille: The best place near campus for burgers, but a bit pricey.